RUSSIAN EXERCISE ON NATO BORDER HAS U.S. ON ALERT

A HUGE SHOW OF FORCE

Officials Worry Troops Won't Leave Belarus After Maneuvers

By MICHAEL R. GORDON and ERIC SCHMITT

WASHINGTON — Russia is preparing to send as many as 100,000 troops to the eastern edge of NATO territory at the end of the summer, one of the biggest steps yet in the military buildup undertaken by President Vladimir V. Putin and an exercise in intimidation that recalls the most ominous days of the Cold War.

The troops are conducting military maneuvers known as Zapad, Russian for "west," in Belarus, the Baltic Sea, western Russia and the Russian enclave of Kaliningrad. The drills will feature a reconstituted armored force named for a storied Soviet military unit, the First Guards Tank Army. Its establishment represents the first time since the collapse of the Soviet Union that so much offensive power has been concentrated in a single command.

The military exercise, planned for many months, is not a reaction to sweeping new economic sanctions on Russia that Congress passed last week. So far, Russia has retaliated against the sanctions by forcing the expulsion of several hundred employees in American diplomatic posts in the country.

But the move is part of a larger effort by Mr. Putin to shore up Russia's military prowess, and comes against the backdrop of an increasingly assertive Russia. Beyond Russia's interfering in the 2016 presidential election in support of the Trump campaign, which has seized attention in the United States, its military has in recent years deployed forces to Syria, seized Crimea and intervened in eastern Ukraine, called the Baltic States with NATO exercises and buzzed NATO planes and ships.

Deal With Prosecutor to Avoid A 'Life Sentence of Deportation'

By VINIAN YEE

The drunken-driving case seemed straightforward, the kind that prosecutors in Seattle convert into a quick guilty plea hundreds of times a year: a swerving car, a blood-alcohol level more than twice the legal limit, a first-time offense that caused no injuries.

The only complication was the driver, a 23-year-old undocumented immigrant studying at the University of Washington. Through a federal program for people who had entered the country illegally as children, she had gained some assurance that she would not be deported. But if she pleaded guilty to driving under the influence, the punishment could be compounded by a more permanent penalty. She could lose her protected status; she could be deported.

Syria's Young Saw the Worst, But Dangers Lurk Beyond ISIS

By SOMINI SENGUPTA and RWADA SAAD

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The boy did not want to see a beheading, so he held his mother's hand tight and tried to close his eyes. But seeing it was mandatory when the Islamic State ruled his hometown in northern Syria: If you were out on the street, you had to watch. The boy, now 11 and a refugee in Beirut, reckons he saw 10 beheadings, and once he saw a man accused of a crime being thrown off the top of a building. Videos of executions — and children were invited to watch inside mosques. "Some of my friends, they used to go and watch," said the boy, who gave only his first name, Muhammad. "They liked it."

Even by the brutal standards of the Syrian civil war, children growing up in areas ruled by the Islamic State have experienced and witnessed astonishing brutality. Schools have been closed for years. Polio has made a comeback. Boys have been recruited to fight.

Now, as foreign militaries and local militia try to flush out the Islamic State from its last redoubts in Syria, children fleeing the violence have to dodge airstrikes, snipers and then thirst and scorpions as they make their way across the desert.

reach safety. The militias taking on the Islamic State are also recruiting children to fight, according to aid workers and United Nations officials. Aid workers say children are being lured with money, guns and an inflated sense of importance — an allegation denied by a spokesman for the Syrian Kurdish fighters and Arab militias that are collectively known as the Syrian Democratic Forces and are backed by the United States.

His Plays About the West Forged a New Frontier

By BEN BRANTLEY

Sam Shepard, whose hallucinatory plays redefined the landscape of the American West and its inhabitants, died on Thursday at his home in Kentucky. He was 73.

A spokesman for his family announced the death on Monday, saying the cause was complications of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or Lou Gehrig's disease.

Possessed of a stately handsome face and a rangy frame, Mr. Shepard became a familiar presence as an actor in films that included "Days of Heaven" (1978), "The Right Stuff" (1983) and "Baby Boom" (1987). He wore a passing resemblance to that iconic idol of Hollywood's golden era, Gary Cooper, and in an earlier age, Mr. Shepard could have made a career as a leading man of Westerns.

A reluctant movie star who was always suspicious of celebrity's lustre, he was more at home as one of the theater's most original and prolific playwrights of what was once the American frontier.

In plays like "True West" (1980), "Red for Love" (1983) and the Pulitzer Prize-winning "Buried Child" (1978), he dismantled the classic iconography of cowboys and homesteaders, of American dreams and white picket fences.

Vase, Thought to Be Looted, Is Seized From Met

By TOM MASHBERG

For decades it was proudly displayed in the Greco-Roman galleries of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, a 2,300-year-old, vividly painted vase that depicts Dionysus, god of the grape harvest, riding in a cart pulled by a satyr.

Today it sits in an evidence room at the district attorney's office in Manhattan after prosecutors quietly seized the antiquity last week based on evidence that it had been looted by tomb raiders in Italy in the 1970s.

Investigators issued a warrant to the Met on July 21 after reviewing photos and other evidence sent to them in May by a forensic archaeologist in Europe who has been tracking looted artifacts for more than a decade. The museum said that it had delivered the object to prosecutors the next day and anticipates that the vase, used in antiquity for mixing water and wine, will ultimately return to Italy.

The museum has worked diligently to ensure a just resolution of this matter," Kenneth Welton, a museum spokesman, said in a statement.

The case closely echoes the removal of another terra-cotta vase
